

Viagra or Jellyfish?

Viagra might have competition soon: the Jellyfish?

If you want to buy the best medication for your ED then Viagra is a good choice. It is the first impotence medication approved for the treatment of erectile dysfunction, Viagra is very popular in England and most parts of the world. Other drugs like Cialis and Levitra also provide competition to Viagra especially online but the latter is still the best choice among patients who want an effective drug for their sexual health. However, Viagra is faced with another competition that is touted to be an effective treatment for erectile dysfunction, jellyfish.

Thanks or no thanks (whichever way you want to look at it) to the Irukandji Syndrome that comes as a result of jellyfish stinging, a man achieves a prolonged erection that is said to rival the effects of Viagra. However, such erection comes with severe pain which would probably erase any sexual ideas a man may have. While jellyfish stinging can do wonders for males who have a hard time achieving and maintaining an erection, it can also result to severe cerebral hemorrhaging and blood pressure increase which be fatal. It can also lead to cramps, breathing difficulties, cardiac problems and vomiting. These medical conditions may be too much of a trade-off just so one can get an erection.

Viagra's side effects are pretty manageable compared to the side effects of getting yourself stung by a jellyfish just to get an erection. One good thing about Viagra is that it is a prescribed medication which means you have to get your doctor's advice prior to using Viagra. This is to make sure that you are suffering from erectile dysfunction and not from any other conditions with almost the same symptoms. This will also ensure your safety.

Your doctor will have to check you thoroughly before he prescribes an erectile dysfunction drug like Viagra. He will also be knowledgeable if you are taking medications like nitrates which would interact negatively with Viagra. These and other factors make Viagra one of the safest erectile dysfunction medicines in town.

If you want to try jellyfish sting as an alternative to Viagra for any reason at all then do it at your own risk (LOL "Please do not try this"). If you want a safer way to treat your erectile dysfunction then opt for Viagra.